Codex Gigas

The Devil's Bible

THE LARGEST MEDIEVAL book ever written weighs an astonishing 165 pounds. It stands 36 inches tall and is 20 inches wide. It is almost nine inches thick. No wonder it is known as Codex Gigas, which is Latin for "The Giant Book." It was written in a monastery in Bohemia (now the Czech Republic) in the early 1200s CE. Except for a few later notes, every word in this gigantic manuscript was written by the hand of one and the same scribe, who was surely a monk. It has been estimated that this monk spent some twenty or thirty years of his life writing out the Codex Gigas by hand, from its first page to its last.

The Codex Gigas has another name as well: The Devil's Bible. Since it seemed an almost superhuman task for a single monk to have written every word of so gigantic a book by hand, people who wondered at its size it began to ask themselves whether that monk might have had supernatural help from God... or, just maybe, from someone else.

And so legends gathered around the Giant Book. In their final form, they told of a monk, a scribe, who had committed some very great sin, and had been sentenced to be walled up alive. He bargained with his judges: "Will you spare me if in a single night I write a manuscript containing all knowledge, to glorify our monastery forever?" Thinking this impossible, his judges agreed. Alone in his prison cell that night, the monk called on the Prince of Hell and made a pact. With Lucifer's aid, the monk wrote out the entire Giant Book by hand in the course of a single night. Thereby he escaped punishment, but lost his soul.
